2. OBJECTIVES:

The role of the microbiome in cancer development and therapy has been recently identified. Machine learning methods could be an interesting approach to use these data for a more comprehensive characterization of cancer and for better treatment plans. Additionally, the microbiome data could be useful for early detection. The early prediction of cancer would help clinicians improve treatments and take interventions timely, thus facilitating patient recovery.

The goal of this project is to develop ML-based models for cancer prediction and characterization. Implementation of explainable methods to allow the clinicians to understand and trust the model's decision. Develop data-driven approaches to aid clinical decision-making and ultimately improve patient care.

3. BRIEF PRESENTATION OF THE WORK PROGRAMME AND TRAINING:

- extend the knowledge of the state of the art in machine learning for microbiome data
- identify and select the appropriate methods for the study in question;
- develop the research capacity through the application of the selected methods;
- exercise a critical spirit in the evaluation of the research process and the results obtained.
